HISTORY

Legend has it that Ljubljana was founded by the Greek mythological hero Jason and his companions, the Argonauts, who had stolen the Golden Fleece from King Aetes and fled from him across the Black Sea and up the Danube, Sava and Ljubljanica rivers.

At a large lake in the marshes near the source of the Ljubljanica they stopped and disassembled their ship to be able to carry it to the Adriatic Sea, put it together again, and return to Greece. The lake was the dwelling place of a monster, which Jason fought, defeated and killed. The monster, now referred to as the Ljubljana Dragon, found its place atop the castle tower depicted on the Ljubljana coat of arms.

Emona, the earliest known name of the present Ljubljana, is probably of Celtic origin. Until the 1st century BC, when the Ljubljana Basin was conquered by the Romans, it was part of the Celtic kingdom of Noricum. As strategic stronghold which played an important role in numerous wars, was fortified with massive town walls (photo: reconstructed Roman Walls).

It had a population of five to six thousand people, mainly merchants and craftsmen, government officials and war veterans. Its streets were paved. Its brick-built houses with plastered and painted walls and mosaic floors were furnished with sewage facilities and central heating.

In 452 AD, Emona was sacked by the Huns under Attila. For long decades during the Migration Period it was wrapped in darkness. The Slovenians' Slavic forefathers arrived in the area at the end of the 6th century and began to build a settlement under the shelter of the present castle hill. The settlement gradually turned into a medieval town.

During the 9th century, Slavic settlements gradually fell under the rule of the Franks. The period saw frequent Hungarian raids. Around 1000, the Hungarians were defeated by the Germans and their territories were ceded to various German noble families. Between 1112 and 1125, the nobleman Rudolf of Tarcento gave a small estate near Ljubljana's castle hill to the Patriarchate of Aquileia. The document evidencing this represents the earliest known mention of Ljubljana.

Ljubljana's rapid growth began in the 13th century. The town, called Laibach at the time, consisted of three urban cores including Old Square (Stari trg), Town Square (Mestni trg) and New Square (Novi trg), each surrounded by a wall. It was entered by five town gates and its three urban cores were connected by two bridges. In 1220, Ljubljana was granted city rights. Its own money was minted at Ljubljana Castle. Its residents, mainly craftsmen, were organized in guilds.

In 1278, Ljubljana fell under the Hapsburg rule as part of the Province of Carniola, Having been granted as many as 39 trade and other privileges, it began to attract merchants and craftsmen from around Europe.

In the 15th century Ljubljana became renowned for its art. Particularly well known were painter's workshops one of which was called Ljubljana Sculptural Workshop. After the earthquake of 1511, the city was rebuilt in the Renaissance style and surrounded by a new town wall.

In the 16th century, when Ljubljana had a population of 5,000 people, 70 percent of them speaking Slovenian as their mother tongue, it became the center of the Slovenian Reformation movement and culture. 1550 saw the publishing of Catechismus and Abecedarium, the first two books ever written in Slovenian, and Slovenian translation of the Bible. At about the same time, Ljubljana got its first secondary school, public library and printing house. The period of Reformation was followed by a period of renewed dominance of the Catholic Church and Counter-Reformation.

In 1597, Jesuits arrived in Ljubljana and founded a gymnasium, which later developed into a college. The end of the 17th century saw the foundation of the Academia Operosorum, a scholarly society modelled on Italian associations of the kind. The Academia attracted architects and sculptors from abroad and Ljubljana's Renaissance appearance disappeared under Baroque façades.

New frontages, arched courtyards and staircases, and third floors were added to originally two-store Renaissance buildings. Most churches were renovated or built in the Baroque style. A jewel in the crown of Baroque Ljubljana was the work of the sculptor Francesco Robba (photo: Robba Fountain of Three Slovene Rivers).

1701 saw the establishment of the Academia Philharmonicorum, one of the first institutions of the kind to be founded outside Italy. Honorary members of its immediate successor, the Philharmonic Society, included composers such as Josef Haydn, Ludwig van Beethoven and Johannes Brahms, and the violinist Niccolò Paganini. Gustav Mahler was one of the Society's conductors between 1881 and 1882. The 18th century saw a manufacturing boom in Ljubljana but its economic importance still lay in its being a transit point.

Under French occupation (1809-1813) Ljubljana was the capital of the French Empire's Illyrian Provinces. Slovenian became one of the official languages and Ljubljana's first college was founded. In 1821, after the re-establishment of Austrian rule, the city hosted a Congress of the Holy Alliance which brought together several European rulers determined to put a brake on emerging nations' endeavors to achieve political freedom and constitutionality. To commemorate the Congress, one of the city's main squares was named Kongresni trg (Congress Square).

World War I affected it only indirectly. In 1918, after the disintegration of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, Slovenia became part of the Kingdom of Serbs, Croats and Slovenians, and Ljubljana its administrative, political and cultural center. The years to follow saw the foundation of the University of Ljubljana (1919), the National Gallery (1918) and the Academy of Sciences and Arts (1938).

Between the two World Wars, the city's appearance was thoroughly changed by the architect Jože Plečnik (Prague Castle Chradchany, Vienna Sacher Hotel), who managed to strike a balance between the Romance Baroque and the Germanic Secession. He put such a distinct personal stamp on Ljubljana that the term Plečnik's Ljubljana was coined to refer to a whole period in the city's architectural history (photo Three Bridges).

During World War II, Ljubljana was occupied first by the Italian and later by the German army. After World War II, Ljubljana became the capital of Slovenia, one of the six republics constituting the socialist Yugoslavia. It witnessed a rapid economic development, which attracted numerous immigrants and resulted in the city's expansion.

On 23 December 1990, the citizens of Slovenia voting in the independence plebiscite decided in favor of an autonomous and independent state. The independent Slovenia was declared on 25 June 1991 and Ljubljana was named its capital. In May 2004 it entered the European Union and in 2008 adopted EURO as national currency.
