February 9, 2019

Inzell, Germany

Tenth consecutive 5000m title for Sáblíková as Dutchmen savour a super Saturday

Veteran Martina Sáblíková (CZE) fended off the challenge of 23-year-old Olympic champion Esme Visser (NED) to win her tenth consecutive 5000m world title on Day 3 of the World Single Distances Championships in Inzell on Saturday, while Brittany Bowe (USA) topped the podium in the 1000m for the first time since 2015.

The Dutch dominated the men’s podium as Kai Verbij (NED) clinched the Netherlands’ first individual gold medal of these championships. The European Sprint champion won the 1000m, with compatriots Thomas Krol and Kjeld Nuis collecting silver and bronze, before Jorrit Bergsma (NED) took gold in the 10,000m narrowly ahead of runner-up Patrick Roest (NED).

Track record

In the 5000m, Carien Kleibeuker (NED) set the bar at 6:56.47 in the second pairing. Despite three others skating personal bests, no one was able to break the seven-minute barrier before Isabelle Weidemann (CAN) and Esme Visser (NED) stepped on the ice in the fourth of six pairings.

But before the 31-year-old nine-time champion got her crack at Visser’s new track record, Natalya Voronina (RUS) had her chance in the penultimate pairing. The 24-year-old long-distance specialist kept Visser's split times in sight until halfway, but could not keep up with the pace thereafter. With 6:50.39, Voronina still managed to stay under Sáblíková’s previous track record, but she eventually had to settle for the bronze medal.

Fighter Sáblíková

Sáblíková knew exactly what to do. “I tried to do all 32.0 (laps). Sometimes it was one-tenth slower and sometimes one-tenth faster, but I managed to keep my pace. It was almost impossible, but I saw the public, and my brother was here. It was so emotional when we met today, because he did not have a chance to see me after my win in the 3000m (on Thursday). He came all the way to see me and he inspired me. I’m a fighter.”

The split times were alternating in favor of Visser or Sáblíková almost every lap, but the Czech veteran had a trump card up her sleeve. “I knew she (Visser) had a final lap in 33.0, so heading into the last lap I knew that if I could keep my technique, I would win.”

With a final lap of 32.2 and a finishing time of 6:44.85, Sáblíková recaptured her track record, collecting her tenth consecutive 5000m world title, but she acknowledged Visser’s part in her triumph. “She is amazing and I don’t know what would have happened if she had skated after me. It could have been the other way around on the podium.”
Visser’s time will come

Visser, whose Olympic triumph last year came before she had even won a World Cup medal, said: “I had the feeling that she (Sáblíková) would be able to beat my time, but yes I think it was an advantage for her. It’s different if you have to set the bar without really knowing what’s possible, or if you can focus on a time which you only have to beat by a small margin. She knew she had to skate 32.0 laps the whole race and that’s something I’m also capable of.

“Of course I’m a little disappointed, but maybe it’s only good that I don’t win everything at first sight. It keeps me hungry for next season.

“She (Sáblíková) told me not to be too disappointed, because my time will come. She said that I had inspired her to raise her own level. It’s good hear something like that from such a great champion.”

Bowe class apart

Brittany Bowe (USA) left the rest of the field far behind in the 1000m, breaking her own track record of 1:14.01 by 0.6 seconds. Before the 2015 world champion entered the rink in the penultimate pairing versus Nao Kodaira, Miho Takagi (JPN) had set the fastest time in 1:14.58.

“I wasn’t worried abut that time at all,” 30-year-old Bowe said afterwards, revealing her race plan. “When I’m on the inner (lane) with Nao, one of the fastest openers in the world, I knew I had to open fast but remain within my game plan and not go harder than I normally do, because I have that gas at the end.

“But I knew I needed to get it going, so she did not have a good chase on that first back stretch, and I knew she would come under me in that second turn, but I tried to remain calm. Driving out of that second corner with just one lap to go, I was just looking at her the whole way, fighting.”

That fight ended in 1:13.41, the only time to break the 1:14 barrier. Kodaira got caught in the last corner and finished in 1:14.44. In the final pairing Vanessa Herzog managed to edge out the Japanese for the silver medal in 1:14.38.

Bowe had been struggling to recover from a concussion over the past two seasons and she was relieved to be back on top. “It feels good, to be able to hear my national anthem on top of that podium, it’s been some time now,” she said.

“It definitely makes you appreciate more how difficult this sport is. It’s taken two solid years to get back and I never gave up believing in myself and neither did my coaching staff.”

Herzog was glad to follow up her world title in the 500m on Friday with a silver in the double distance. “I saw Brittany’s time and to beat that I had to do a personal best which is really hard here, so I’m happy.”

Kodaira could also smile after her disappointment in the 500m, when she finished .07 seconds behind Herzog. “Today I’m happy,” she said. “Yesterday, my heart was almost broken. But I went to sleep and knew that today would give me a new chance. I went all or nothing and this bronze medal is a beautiful bonus.”
Friends on the podium

Before Verbij took the ice in the penultimate pairing in the 1000m, his good friend and former teammate Krol had been the first to skate under 1:08, breaking Kjeld Nuis’s 2018 track record by three-hundredths of a second in 1:07.67.

“He scared the hell out of me with that time,” Verbij admitted afterwards.

Despite his nerves, the 2017 World Sprint champion managed to keep his composure. “I didn’t use to have a real plan for the 1000m in the past, but now I do. I skated quite a lot of 1000m starting in the inner lane, so I know what to do. I start at 80-90 percent and play safe in the second inner corner. From that moment onwards I attack the outer corners full throttle.”

The plan worked perfectly and Verbij had enough power left to skate 26.1 in the final lap to finish in 1:07.39.

The 24-year-old said: “I knew I had to skate a 1:07 something to win here and I did, so I did what I had to do.”

Krol, 26, had mixed feelings at being bettered by his friend. “It’s supercool to be on the podium together, but I’d rather have seen a different order obviously,” he said.

After Verbij’s run, Olympic champion Nuis took on Pavel Kulizhnikov (RUS) in the final pairing. The Dutchman had a false start and both skaters had a sloppy race with little mis-strokes. Nuis still managed to clock 1:07.81 for bronze, but Kulizhnikov had to settle for sixth place in 1:08.13.

Nuis, 29, insisted the false start had not influenced his race. “No, I had a false start last year at the Olympics and I skated the race of my life, and today my opening was good too,” he said.

“I was focused on my opponent too much, instead of on my own technique. We both skated a jerky race and I’m really gutted. But all credit to Kai: he skated a fantastic race.”

Close margins in 10,000m

Jorrit Bergsma took his third 10,000m world title in the day’s final event, edging out compatriot Patrick Roest by four-tenths of a second, while Danila Semerikov (RUS) pushed home favorite Patrick Beckert (GER) off the podium by a 0.002 margin.

Beckert had skated 12:57.40 in the penultimate pairing and, with only Roest and Semerikov to go, he was in silver medal position. Bergsma was in the lead with 12:52.92.

Roest attacked Bergsma’s time straight from the start and he got a small lead over his compatriot in the split times until the sixth of 25 laps. He gradually lost time in the rest of the race and with two laps to go the World Allround champion was almost three seconds down on Bergsma.

In the meantime Semerikov, in bronze medal position, was closing on Roest. The 23-year-old Dutchman said: “I was afraid that he (Semerikov) would come back and that would endanger my silver medal, so I tried to pull my last reserve.”
Heading into the final lap, the deficit on Bergsma was still more than two seconds and Semerikov was more than two seconds behind Roest.

Roest accelerated to skate a 29.8 final lap, giving Bergsma quite a scare but finishing in 12:53.34. A beaming Bergsma, 33, said: “That was close. I skated a solid race, but not great. Halfway through the race I thought that Patrick would win, but then he appeared not to be so strong either. But in the end he accelerates super strong.”

In Roest’s draft Semerikov finished in the same time as Beckert, but he appeared to have pushed his skate over the line two thousandths earlier than the German, who took his loss like a true sportsman, saying: “I’m happy with my time. When you’re so close to a medal it’s hard to be satisfied but that’s sport. Sometimes you’re lucky, sometimes you’re not.”

For full entry lists and further information regarding the ISU World Single Distances Speed Skating Championships please visit: isu.org/speed-skating. Results are here and you can follow the discussion on social media by using #WorldSpeed and #SpeedSkating.

The ISU World Single Distances Speed Skating Championships is available in some countries on the ISU Skating Channel.